

Ecamm Announces BT-1 Wireless Webcam for Mac

JANUARY 2, 2009 -- Ecamm Network today announces the world's first webcam with Bluetooth wireless technology. The new BT-1 combines top-notch video and sound with complete freedom from wires.

The new webcam for Mac users integrates advanced technologies to allow video and sound to be sent through the air to most any Mac. The BT-1 streams H.264 video and AAC audio, taking advantage of Mac OS X's rich media capabilities to provide a truly seamless experience.

Designed for video chat, the BT-1 frees Mac users from the constraints of a built-in camera, allowing for maximum versatility in camera position, pan and tilt. The included flexible mini-tripod makes for easy desktop mounting.

"Introducing this new class of wireless products is very exciting," says Ecamm's Glen Aspeslagh. "Users will be impressed with the quality and ease of use that we've built into the BT-1."

The BT-1 Wireless Webcam is expected to be available worldwide beginning in March. The suggested retail price in the U.S. is $149.99. Ecamm Network will be showing the webcam at Macworld Conference & Expo, January 5-9 in San Francisco. (Booth 231)
